Life and Trouble

Would the world ever have been made if its maker had been afraid of making trouble? Making life means making trouble. There's only one way of escaping trouble; and that's killing things. Cowards, you notice, are always shrieking to have troublesome people killed.—George Bernard Shaw.

Landscape Gardening

The ancients practiced landscape gardening, but little is known about the styles in vogue among the different people. From the early times of the Christian era to the Thirteenth century the art was mainly practiced in the adornment of walled gardens connected with castles or convents. Lenotre was a celebrated French landscape gardener of the Seventeenth century.

Poison in Jasmies
The Department of Agriculture advises us that yellow jessamine contains certain alkaloids which would cause toxicity if taken internally, and caution should consequently be used concerning it. The oleander, however, is deadly poisonous, and should never be kept on lawns or around houses where children may have access to it.—Washington Star.

Labor Conquers All Things

—Homer

It's as true today as ever—the force that moves us onward in the line of progress is the brawn and the brain of working men and women. Their Collective effort pushes the world ahead to higher levels of living. So to day let's give praise to the working people. They're the backbone of our enormous population. Let's honor them for their whole hearted efforts. Let's give them a big hand!
