McDonald-Boren affair. There were flashes of good tennis in other sets also. The number witnessing the matches was small because of the fact that only the players and very few knew of the transfer of play from the coliseum lot to the Bennett site. More will doubtless witness the next round of play.

It was found today that possibly two of those who came through the opening round would not be here to compete next Sunday. These are Martin Zuercher and J. E. Boren. It is thought that the ones they defeated would get to enter the second round. These would be J. Paul Snyder and Douglas McDonald.

A meeting will be held one night this week by the Princeton Tennis club to decide the procedure for carrying out the rest of the tournament.

May Go Like This:
Should the substituting course be followed Sunday the schedule would be: J. Paul Snyder vs. Douglas McDonald; Taylor Bennett vs. Ray Snyder; Charles Bahne vs. Don Felts; Earl Downey vs. Tom Pierce. The winner of the Snyder-McDonald affair would meet the winner of the Bennett-Snyder play; the winner of the Bahne-Felts go would meet the winner of the Downey-Pierce game. In the semi-finals the winner of the Snyder-McDonald and Bennett-Snyder section would meet the winner of the Harmon-Lawrence affair. The winner of the Bahne-Pierce affairs would meet the winner of the upper bracket in the finals.

Some good games will be on tap and tennis fans and sports enthusiasts will see some fine exhibitions. The coliseum courts were in poor shape Sunday afternoon even after the night and morning of drying. It was sopping in places and was badly gutted by the streams of water that poured over it. The Bennett court was in good shape. It was playable Saturday evening.

SHOOTING STARS NOT SO NUMEROUS

Princeton people who looked for the "shooting stars" between midnight and daybreak last night saw a few in the northeastern part of the sky but those who have reported say they did not see so many nor were those observed remarkable.

However, there may be more tonight or tomorrow night. If so, anybody wandering around at 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning should have a good view if the sky is clear.

Quoth Mary Eaton: "That's nothing, Eaton is my last name."
Now you know darn well it must be the heat.
Temperament.
Evelyn Brent has been suspected of having temperament. She has even been accused of temperament. But never in her palmyest temperamental flairs did she remotely achieve the heights reached by her cook (other morn.

Miss Brent was awakened by a scream. She decided somebody next door had screamed. Why, didn't matter. It was too early for a scream, anyway. She turned over for a last snooze. Loud voices. She jerked upright, scowling. The loud voices continued—from her kitchen. Throwing on a kimono and slipping her feet into mules, she padded down the stairs.
"What's going on here?" she asked, severely.

A stormy-eyed cook stormed at her. A wild-eyed maid sighed relief. It seemed the maid had gone to the icebox to get the fruit for Miss Brent's breakfast. The cook, subsequently, hit the culinary ceiling. How dare she touch her icebox! How dare! Wham! She smacked the startled maid a solid blow. The maid retaliated vocally. Ergo—the loud voices.

There and then, Miss Brent fired the cook. If she insists upon mixing fists and vitamins, she should apply to the California Boxing commission for a permit. Be that as it may, the cook is now free-lancing.
