

PRINCETON PUBLISHING CO.
 (Incorporated)
 10th Main Street Phone 100

Princeton Clarion - Founded 1846
 Evening News - Founded 1892

Postoffice at Princeton, Indiana, for transport through the mails as second-class matter.

OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS
 The Clarion Press is exclusively entitled to use all news dispatches credited to it, or edited in this paper, and also to the syndicate hereof.
 The reproduction of special dispatches is reserved.

Editor, President
 Fred R. Ewing, Secretary and Treasurer

Managing Editor
 George B. Grigsby, Business Manager

SUBSCRIPTION RATES
 In Gibson County
 One Year.....$2.50 Per Week
 Outside Gibson County
 One Year.....$5.00

Circulation in Gibson County, and the Daily Circulation in Gibson County
ADVERTISING BOOKS ARE OPEN TO ALL

TELEPHONES:
 100 Editorial Rooms 101

Leading News and Advertising
 Medium Since 1846

smoking is decidedly on the increase, while the sale of cigars is in a decline. The increase in cigaret consumption is credited to women smokers. In olden days, women who smoked, preferred a clay pipe, but the later day feminine devotees of tobacco are satisfied with the inhales of the "coffin nails."

One week from today Princeton will stage a great Labor Day celebration, a fitting inaugural for the big week of the Gibson county fair. This will make six big days, as the plans for both the Labor Day and the fair programs provide for a series of entertainment events. Since the weather promises to be agreeable, there is no reason why the week should not be a decided success in every respect.

CUTTING DOWN

The Lansing, Mich., State Journal:
 The effect of legislation during the last 20 years upon the number of immigrant arrivals is shown when comparison is made of the number admitted during the fiscal year 1907, when the total reached 1,285,349, with arrivals during the last fiscal year, which were 304,488. Immigration officials have ways of knowing that with unrestricted immigration there would have been increased immigration since 1907. Harry E. Hull, commissioner general of immigration, speaks of millions of aliens who have been excluded from this country by immigration laws in recent years. But he observes:

"We conclude from these immigration figures that even under the present restrictive and selective immigration laws, aliens are not discouraged from seeking admission to this country, or from subsequently availing themselves of the privileges of naturalization."

For the safety of the newcomer, as well as for the native American, the country had to limit the number seeking employment and opportunity here. Without the help of restrictive laws the nation could not have maintained its fortunate labor mean.

Recognizing the vital need for a high order of citizenship, the American people welcome to their shores all who qualify and turn away the unqualified for the good of all concerned. The primary purpose of selective immigration is to guarantee future American citizenships of a high type. The primary purpose of limited immigration is to protect native labor and preserve economic stability.

When a Man Loves
 By ALICE LOWE MILES

Copyright 1927, Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc.
 John Barrymore in "WHEN A MAN LOVES" is a Warner Bros. production
 Naturalization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Fablen, a good and handsome youth of France, training for the priesthood, meets and loves Manon Lescaut, a beautiful orphan who is being taken to a convent by her only relative, a brother who doesn't want to be bothered with her. Rivoir, a rich connoisseur of women, smitten with Manon, seduces her from her rascally brother; but Fablen saves Manon by carrying her to Paris. Poor and friendless, they wander into a boarding house and are put into the same room by the landlady, who thinks them married. The maid, Marie, thinks Manon is an angel.

CHAPTER V—Continued.

A quick scrutiny of Fablen proved disappointing. According to her views, he was far too refined and gentle. If Marie could have selected a man for herself or the lovely girl who stood before her he would have a beautiful, sharply waxed moustache, shoulders full of glittering finger curls and a great diamond shining from wide, fluffy hair at his neck. He would wear a crimson satin coat and sky blue breeches and a strongly scented lace handkerchief would dangle from a big ruby finger ring. That was the kind of a man for a lady to have—or at least it was Marie's idea of a prospect.

However, people seldom met with Marie's ideas of perfection. With a jerk she brought herself back from her dream and said: "Come to your room. It's on the top floor, so I hope your wind is good. You'd better hold to the railing 'cos you won't fall," she turned to advise, then continued, "yours is a nice room when you get to it, but it's the going up and coming down that's bad."

Marie chatted incessantly all the way up. Finally she threw open a door at the top of the last flight of stairs and disclosed a cosy attic room with dormer windows. The few pieces of furniture were cheap, yet some bright prints on the wall and gay curtains at the window gave the welcome interior an air of artistic shabbiness that was really attractive.

Even with Fablen's help she climbed had wearied Manon, but standing in the doorway she clasped her hands in childlike delight at this welcome haven of rest. Crossing to the bed, she released Fifi. "Poor little darling, you are all cramped and tired, aren't you?" said Manon, stroking her pet with gentle fingers.

Marie followed the motion of her graceful hand with envy. Then as she noticed Manon's ringless wedding with a wise little smile thrilled at her discovery.

There was just a little casm in Marie's voice as she hoped the room pleased Manon with an understanding glance, both she insolently handed and went hurrying down.

Fablen understood her and was furious. He would have followed and rung the bell, but Marie was intolerable to think of being subjected to insult by people who were blind fools. Manon in the high esteem she served. Yet why let a man him angry when Manon's presence had protected her from hurt at the sunrise.

Manon had stopped in the room to look from the window. "Oh, Fablen, com

He paused in speechless as he saw Manon, called in delight. "See the view down there brightening the street—it makes the room much more homelike." Fablen through a half yawn.

"My dear, you are tired long trip," sympathized me your hat."

"I cannot—I am too prove how tired she was arms hang limply at her sides."

"Then it is my privilege for you." With trembling Fablen removed the big, quickly turned away to tion.

Rain was falling on t

D HOME TOWN

DOC DOESN'T KNOW THAT JOCK HAS A HIDDEN POCKET, WHERE HE EXPECTS TO CARRY HIS FEELING WHEN HE'S NOT USING 'EM.

BUY YOUR HARD CANDY

DOC I WASN'T TAKIN' NO CHANCES

Stanley