(By the United Press)
 CLEVELAND, O., Sept. 2.—Issuance of the federal injunction against striking shopmen has rendered the big four brotherhoods powerless to make any further attempts to settle the strike or to aid the strikers financially. This was the opinion expressed today by D. B. Robertson and Warren Stone, presidents of the firemen and engineers respectively. "We can do nothing further," they announced, "We cannot discuss the strike with the shop crafts leaders or we violate the injunction. We are restrained from turning over donations from our members to the shopmen." Robertson declared that a Labor Day message he wrote August 29 "must stand as written." It was to be made public Monday.

In this message Robertson attacked advocates of the open shop as "unjust and un-American." He predicted the loss of the open shop movement and urged the unions to stand solidly against it.

A guarded statement from headquarters of the federated shopcrafts declared that the organization would support the government's effort to "end lawlessness and violence in connection with the strike."
The statement declared however, that "It can hardly be assumed that the federal court intended to restrain the lawful acts necessary in carrying on the legitimate work of labor organizations."

Blackburn Esterline, special assistant United States attorney-general, stayed here to take charge of prosecutions in connection with the injunction when Daugherty left for Washington.
The marshal's office stated that all attempts to serve Bert Jewell, spokesman for the federated shopcrafts, had failed.
