This is sure some corn growing weather!

The soft dring renders at the fair have reason to be well pleased with the weather's behavior.

If it were not for the contemplation of next Monday's school the average small boy would be in "seventh heaven" this week.

The air plane gets all the front page staff, but don't think for a minute that the popularity of the old-fashioned balloon ascension is on the wane.

The fair management could not have shown its patrons a greater favor than they have in bringing the Buchanan band here for the week. Everybody likes a band, and when it is a high class one it is certain of being appreciated.

LABOR DAY CELEBRATION A SUCCESS

Those who planned, managed and participated in the big Labor day parade and celebration deserve congratulations on the success of the event. The parade was the best ever given in Princeton and the throngs of people who witnessed it gave it the highest praise. The fairgrounds program measured up to all expectations and the day was rounded out with excellent entertainment. Labor day, 1927, will long be remembered as one of Princeton's biggest days.

COUNTER IRRITANT

Et. Wayne News-Sentinel:

Certain daring nether garments may have been devised to divert attention from the hideous haircuts now too current.

STAY-AT-HOMES NOT ALL IN AMERICA

Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette:
 Ireland is learning her democracy much after the fashion that we of America have learned ours. In bye-elections for parliamentary seats, with a most acute and vital issue pending, only about half the voters turned out to vote last Thursday.

THE WALNUT TREE CROP

Anderson Herald:

Farmers who expect their children to follow them as agriculturists would do well to consider walnut trees as a profitable crop. Ira Stout, a farmer living near Sulphur Springs, Henry county, says a good walnut tree was planted sixty-eight years ago on his farm, growing into a tree for which he recently was offered $250.

Thirty-eight years ago Mr. Stout planted many walnuts from the parent tree. One of the resulting trees has just been sawed into lumber, yielding 285 board feet of first-class walnut lumber. In the standing tree this was worth $11.88. A grove of these same trees would yield $168 an acre net profit annually. The trees produce sufficient nuts to pay for planting costs and upkeep.

So the state forestry department is urging farmers who may have some waste ground to send for walnut seedlings at one-half a cent each, and let them grow into money.

Indiana needs more walnut, ash, oak and tulip poplar trees, such as were removed when

SYNOPSIS

Fabien, good and handsome youth of France, trains for the priesthood; but meets and loves Manon Lescaut, benevolent orphan, whose rascally brother, realizing her worldly value, harkens her for gold to Ravois, rich connoisseur of women. Fabien saves her and carries her off to Paris, where they live happily together. Manon's brother steals her for Ravois; she escapes, and searches vainly for Fabien (Circumstances force her to surrender to Ravois). Then Fabien sees her in a gaudy carriage, and suspects the awful truth.

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

"Manon!—Manon!" Fabien called her name from the depths of his starved soul, but the carriage passed on down the boulevard and Manon had not even glanced in his direction.

He started blindly to follow and was gently restrained by Tiberge. "Don't, my friend, it would do no good," he said pitifully.

"I won't believe it. It can't be true!" his whole face was convulsed with grief.

"Then you must be contented. Take advantage of your father's credit—visit your father and go tonight to Friant's—you will see Manon with your own eyes. I am told that she and the Comtesse are favored patrons at the club."

"I will. And after I have talked with her, I will prove that you are mistaken."

For the first time in weeks Fabien's voice had its dulness. He was to see Manon again!

The remainder of the afternoon was probably spent with his father's tailor. Fabien's wardrobe was entirely depleted and it was necessary to be fitted out from stores to a becoming way while wit. The best of everything was demanded. Fabien wanted Manon to see him in a different light than their poverty strikes were had permitted. The result was that no young man had ever appeared to better advantage: at least as far as an ob-
